

Question: What do the following items all have in common?

- A bottle of lens cleaner
- A pair of Ray Ban Meta glasses
- Nail polish
- Your cell phone

Answer: They all are considered “dangerous goods” when shipping and require special packaging and handling when being shipped!

But why? May be hard to imagine, but all these items have some component that if handled incorrectly could injure a person or the environment. Lens cleaner and nail polish both contain alcohol, which can be toxic to people or plants. Ray Ban Meta and cell phones both have lithium-ion batteries, which can cause a fire if crushed or otherwise damaged.

In fact, many consumer commodities are considered hazardous or dangerous goods during transport because of the risk they pose to others while in transport (e.g., in a warehouse or on a truck, plane, or ship) may be injured.

What Do I Need to Know?

Shipping hazardous materials can be a complicated process, and there are serious implications for getting it wrong. Therefore, we do not generally allow shipping of hazardous materials.

This includes shipping consumer cleaners between locations.

This is still a dangerous good in transport and can be quite dangerous!

There may be instances under which hazardous material must be shipped.

For example, shipping Ray Ban Meta for return or preparing hazardous waste for disposal are both tasks that require shipping hazardous material.

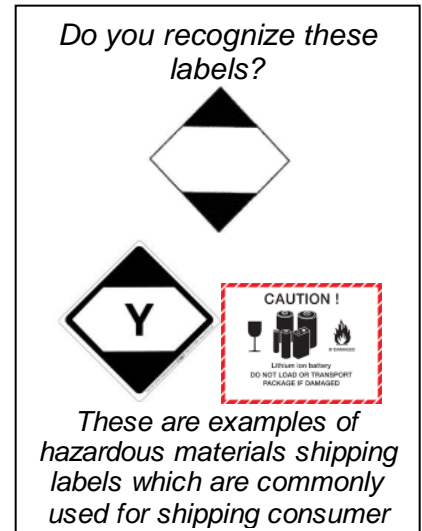

If you responsible for shipping a hazardous material, you must:

- 1) Take the hazardous materials shipping training in Leonardo.
- 2) Read and follow the instructions exactly as provided.
- 3) Ask questions if you are not sure what to or have not been provided clear instructions.

In the event you must ship something hazardous and do not have written instructions, reach out to EssilorLuxottica Environmental, Health and Safety (EHS) for support with instructions on what to do. Email to: RetailSafety@luxotticaretail.com
